U.S. Supreme Court Decisions

If you stood outside of the Capitol's East Front just before 10:30 a.m. Thursday, you could hear cheers emanating from across the street. "A-C-A is here to stay!" chanted the crowd outside the Supreme Court, applauding the high court's 6-3 ruling in King v. Burwell to uphold health insurance subsidies for federally run exchanges, a key component of President Barack Obama's Affordable Care Act.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled Friday that same-sex marriage is a constitutional right throughout the country, a historic victory for gay rights advocates.

— Yahoo Politics (6-26-15)

Certainly, the impact of both Supreme Court decisions supports the revolutionary objective of breaking a population's will to resist. Our task is to show Americans that the war is not over and that there is a realistic, responsible strategy for victory. And then provide the leadership and organization for that counterattack.

Both Court decisions just happen to illustrate the theme of our forthcoming booklet, Media-Controlled Delusion. The delusion is that everything is open and on the table and that there is no hidden, unreported organized agenda to steal our freedom. Exposure of that delusion is a powerful message.

For example, we just need to point out the absurd omission in the first report: Who organized the cheering crowds and for what purpose? A New

True colors: Following the 5-4 Supreme Court decision on same-sex marriage, President Obama unabashedly endorsed the homosexual agenda. That night the White House lit up with the rainbow colors of the LGBT "community" — an insult to the original occupants of that stately edifice. Two days earlier, Obama spoke favorably of a national shift in attitudes, directing public attention away from the orchestration and top-down financing of the culture war and its subversive agenda.

York Times photo shows cheering demonstrators displaying several professionally designed signs and even a “patients over politics” sweatshirt.

So obviously the demonstration was organized. Busy Americans don’t just come together spontaneously in front of the Supreme Court for a photo op. But what organization was responsible, what is its real agenda, and who finances it? We aren’t supposed to ask or even think about that.

The Culture War vs. Guns

President Barack Obama called the [South Carolina church] tragedy yet another example of damage wreaked in America by guns. — AP (6-19-15)

In an interview earlier Friday ... Obama said the country has to find a way to respect hunting and sportsmanship traditions while preventing a 21-year-old who “is racist or is deranged from going into a gun store and suddenly is packing and can do enormous harm.” — AP (6-19-15)

President Obama’s reaction to the Charleston church murders came as no surprise. As with the Newtown school massacre, he blamed the availability of the weapon as the problem. The real issue, aside from mourning the nine victims, should be why our society seems to be turning out so many deranged killers.

Rather than targeting America’s gun rights, leaders of public opinion should have been pointing fingers at the culture war, which Obama and other anti-gun liberals are supporting.

Rebuke the Liberal Agenda

The following is taken from our Feb. 2013 Action Report following the Newtown school massacre:

Certainly, much of the breakdown in our social order has to be laid at the door of the liberal and revolutionary agenda seeking to restructure society — whether it be the attack on religion, federal control of education to advance the progressive agenda, or the attack on the traditional family. Moreover, the violence accompanying a breakdown in the social order serves the totalitarian agenda of those sponsoring the revolutionaries....

In his 1969 book, Journey into Darkness, John Douglas, legendary FBI profiler and expert on the criminal personality, concluded:

Unfortunately, no matter what we do with our criminal justice system, the only thing that is going to cut down appreciably on crimes of violence and depravity is to stop manufacturing as many criminals.... [T]he real struggle must be where it has always been: in the home.

And the home has been the target of the Insiders and the liberal agenda for decades.

Instead of blaming social disintegration, President Obama chose to blame the influence of the NRA on Congress, while calling indirectly for revolutionary pressure to overcome America’s commitment to gun rights:

Before the mayors, Obama held out evolving public opinion on gay marriage and climate change as evidence that attitudes can change. — AP (6-19-15)

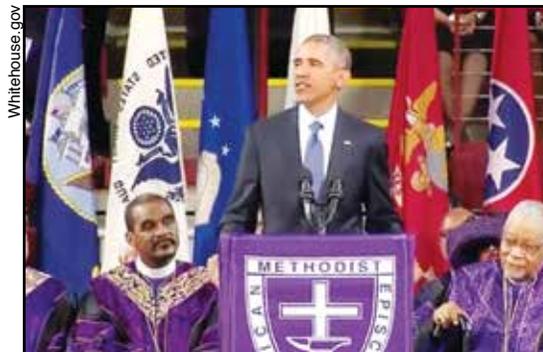

What Obama would like us to accept as undirected “evolving public opinion,” is actually the result of a huge deception for creating “pressure from below.” Long-established revolutionary tactics call for mass demonstrations that, with the help of a supportive media, can be portrayed as representing a major segment of public opinion. Moreover, our controlled media loves to portray its heavily managed stories as the “national public debate.”

Our forthcoming booklet exposes this media-controlled cover-up.

Recommended action: Recruit and build Chapters. Build an organized educational force to challenge the Establishment’s attempted grip on public opinion.

“Free Trade” Pacts

Resistance to President Barack Obama’s trade agenda melted away in Congress on Wednesday

Target the weapon? President Obama reacted to the Charleston church slayings by blaming America’s commitment to gun rights. Instead, he should have targeted liberal-supported social disintegration for churning out deranged killers.

as the Senate prepared to grant him “fast track” negotiating authority and unhappy House Democrats essentially conceded defeat. The events marked a huge win for the president, and one paradoxically spearheaded by Republicans. [Emphasis added.] — AP (6-24-15)

So many deceptions! It’s no paradox that the Republican leadership would promote the Insider goal of creating regional trade blocs. The strategy has always been to portray these pacts as “free trade,” which conservatives would support. In fact, they are designed to undermine the independence of nations and evolve into Internationalist-controlled political unions, following the pattern in Europe, as steppingstones to world government.

Nor is it a paradox that President Obama is doing his part by vigorously supporting this Insider goal or that many liberal Democrats would claim to oppose it. The AP report continued: “While clearly a setback for liberal Democrats, some said they now would focus on details of the multination trade agreements the administration is expected to propose soon.” [Emphasis added.]

The AP report points to one function of the liberal opposition: Provide protective coloration for strengthening the internationalist bureaucracies under the guise of necessary political compromise. Another is to reinforce the image of the pacts as “conservative.”

Accordingly, our online scorecard does not give credit to the Democrats (in either the House or Senate) for their opposition (right vote, wrong reason). Instead, we score the Republicans on their votes for Trade Promotion Authority (“Fast Track”). Only 50 reps earned blue checkmarks (see House Roll Call 374, H.R. 2146) and a scantier five senators (Senate Vote 219, H.R. 2146).

Recommended actions: 1) Check our scorecard to see how your representative and senators voted on giving Obama Trade Promotion Authority and be sure to read the accompanying analyses. 2) Develop your prospects by sharing links to these analyses along with your comments.

Expose the Article V Con-con Fraud

At least 36 out of 50 states have so far effectively adjourned until January (see our online “Status of New Con-Con Resolutions by State”), with only a half-dozen passing new con-con applications. However, many of the con-con bills that didn’t get a floor vote this year will automatically be introduced in the new session. And new bills will be introduced in many of the others.

We can’t afford to squander even this bit of breathing space in the adjourned states. There is much work to be done in building sufficient grassroots opposition to withstand the organized lobbying pressure of the con-con artists.

Recommended actions: In your home state, contact your state legislators (adjourned or otherwise) in opposition to an Article V con-con.

For more than 30 years, Don Fotheringham has provided leadership in this battle. With support from Andrew Carver, Don has agreed to chair our efforts to defeat the renewed drive to scrap our Constitution, which Don describes in his article, “It’s a Whole New Con-Con Game,” posted on our website. If you would like to work directly with Don in this battle in your state, please notify our headquarters.

Also help us spread out into other legislative districts and other states by developing prospects. Develop their understanding of the con-con battle, using our “Dagger in the Heart” Campaign Action Report and Don Fotheringham’s articles posted on our website. Recruit these prospects into our campaign by asking them to inform themselves and contact their state legislators.

But even more important for building a sufficient force to carry the battle next year and the longer term, work to recruit them as members. Better yet, work to create Chapters, a center of influence that can survive for generations.

If you are in an area without a Chapter, a good challenge is to help start one by building a group of interested prospects that will justify a staff recruiting presentation.

Expose the Core of Common Core

Idaho Chapter Leader Mrs. Julianne Young has researched and contributed an important new article exposing what’s really behind Common Core. Her article, entitled “School Children and National Security,” was recently posted on our website. Julianne draws from a 2012 Council on Foreign Relations task force report to expose the myth that “Common Core education reform has been, and will be, state-led and locally controlled.”

Recommended actions: 1) Read Julianne’s article; 2) Share a link to the article with parents concerned about the quality of education; 3) Check our website frequently for updates to this campaign.

The President Makers

I am running because the world is falling apart.

— South Carolina’s senior Senator Lindsey Graham, “CBS This Morning” (5-18-15)

Rick Santorum, an aggressive advocate for conservative family values, will launch a second bid for president on Wednesday, a spokesman said.

— AP (5-27-15)

Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, a one-time rising star in the Republican Party now struggling to become one again, announced Wednesday that he is running for president in 2016.

— Washington Post (6-24-15)

A year before the 2016 GOP and Democratic nominees for president will be selected, more than a dozen major political figures have declared their candidacy, and their number is increasing.

With no incumbent running and relaxed constraints on funding by Super PACs, undoubtedly many are hoping that their candidacy will catch on and attract big-money financial support. There is a candidate or candidates to appeal to almost everyone. Their sheer number will undoubtedly persuade many Americans that electing a president is the opportunity to fix America's problems.

Certainly, all the candidates speak as though gaining the presidency would enable them to carry out the agenda America needs. But they are all misleading Americans, intentionally or not, into investing their hopes and resources in a non-solution, while obscuring the reality of what must be done at the grassroots level to build backbone in Washington.

America's problems are not driven by ideology that can be readily overcome at the ballot box. Presidential authority is limited. We do not elect kings. Moreover, modern presidents tend to be front men for the Establishment and generally do not even control their own administrations.

And, contrary to the illusion that a "good guy" can win, the media will sink any prospective contender that truly threatens the Establishment agenda. The Establishment media will effectively ridicule and discredit the candidate as a threat to world order or national prosperity, as outside serious civilized debate, or as carrying embarrassing baggage.

Attention focused on the many "conservative" candidates serves to take the heat off of the obvious Insider choice — Jeb Bush. A foreseeable tactic is for "conservative voices" to get behind Jeb Bush at the convention: "We don't really like Bush, but he is the only one who can beat the terrible Hillary."

Although electing a candidate for president can't solve our problems, the media encourages the illusion that it can by manufacturing drama over the contest. And Americans, eager for an easy solution, fall for the deception and embrace the prospect of electing a man on a white horse to ride into the White House and set things right.

Recommended action: Continue looking for opportunities to share The President Makers with Americans searching for solutions. Follow up: Invite your prepared prospects to a group presentation.
